During the morning hour Senator Beck called up the resolution, submitted by him last week, declaring it unnecessary or inexsix thousand forty-five dollars and four cents asked for by the secretary of the treasury for a sinking fund, and spoke in favor of the passing of the resolution.

Senator Beck said that he had introduced this resolution for the purpose of obtaining an expression of the sense of the two houses of congress upon what is considered to be the most important to inflict evil and wain expectations. I cannot stop to argue the evils of inflation. If any one, at this day, disbelieves or doubts, he must be given over. I find in this bill this evil in its most insidious and dangerous form. He next referred to the passage of the act of March 3, 1875, to days of its security and strength, its indebtedness of two billion dollars, contracted in the hour of its extremity and to save its life, such a spectacle is abhorrent to national honor and destructive to national credit, involving national humiliation and disgrace. further protect the sinking fund, and argued that if the same information had been before congress then inregard to the sinking fund as now, that act imposing the tax it did would have never passed. He quoted from the debates on that bill, and said that Senator Dawes, when he had charge of the bill in the house of representatives, had been gross-ly deceived by the treasury officials. He [Beck] now had faith that the committee of the two houses of congress would reduce taxation in the interest of the people. All that any country could do, and that this county had done, was to apply its surplus revenues to the payment of its debts.

Senator Burnside submitted an amendment to the clause declaring that said dollar shall be a legal-tender for all debts, public and private, so as to provide that it shall be a legal-tender for all debts, public and private, amounting to sums over five handred dollars. Senators Morrill and Dawes gave notice

Upon the conclusion of Senator Beck's remarks, the resolution was laid over, and the consideration resumed of unfinished business, being the silver bill, and Senator Wallace spoke in favor thereof.

The senate finance committee to dry au-thoried Senator Allison to offer, with its sanction, as an amendment to the silver bill, his provision for an international conference er legal-tender. It is argued that the use of gold in equity compels us to return to some metal; practically, notes and bonds were exchanged for bonds; gold coin was rarely paid. The treditor who gave us gold took his option and paid in cheaper metal. Before 1873 gold was cheaper; silver, up to 1873, was above par. They had an option in payment, and we gave them our obligation reserving our option to pay. An equity cannot arise if it must base itself upon the violation of an express contract. On the face of the contract was the express contract to pay in either to fix a common ratio of the value of gold and silver. The determination of this ratio the revision of the bill. Policy nor expediency give it he higher standing. Our first duty is to be just. This does not include a sacrifice of the means of the people to pay a claim that has no foundation in law or in morals. Are we morally bound to so shape our legislation as to increase the value of a commodity we need to have dur debts? Referting to the het of 1873 demonetizing silver, benator Wallace argued that it was passed a secret manner and in the dark, and the duty of congress was to repeal it.

Senator Bayard said he did not propose now to give any extended expression of his views on the remonetization of silver; he was not in favor of abolishing silver as a coin of the country. Should it be in his power, without disturbance of the business and credit of the country, to restore silver as a money, the effort would not be wanting on his part. He argued that this silver bill, in substance, proposes that two men should approach the mint, one with silver and the other with gold, and that the government should stamp silver and raise it ten per cent, in value, and at the THE SUBJECT OF TRADE DOLLARS, The treasury department is embarrassed as to the proper course to be pursued in relation to the coinage of trade-dollars. The depart for these pears at San Francisco for export to Chine is juite active, and is expected to continue to the last of April. The law requires this demand to be met, but at the present price of silver and the gold value of the greenback dollar, trade-dollars can be placed in domestic circulation at a profit of from three to four per cent, to the owners of silver bullion. A portion of the San Francisco mint coinage of trade-dollars is coming east, and bullion dealers in New York and elsewhere in the east, demand that the Philadelphia mint shall be opened for the same coinage. It is probable that a decision will be reached by to-morrow, and that it will be to allow deposits of silver to be made at the Philadelphia mint for returns in trade dol-

Senator Gordon presented resolutions from a public meeting held at Rome, Georgia, in favor of the remonetization of silver, and for the repeal of the specie resumption act. Re-Senator Dawes then spoke in opposition to the silver bill. He said that so far as this bill adds a dollar to the aggregate volume of the currency, it cheats and deludes people with false quantities and vain expectations.

I was exceedinly anxious for Governor Allen's re-election, be-cause I thought his administration merited popular approval, but more especially because I thought it would contribute to bring about a repeal of the resumption law. After his defeat I had no hope of its repeal. I supposed the Republican senate regarded his defeat as an indorsement of that policy. The passage of the resumption law was not suggested by any supposed interest of the country. It was the result of party necessity, as declared by Governor Morton and Mr. Sherman in the Ohio campaign of 1875. In my belief the resumption law has been the source of the greatest calamity to the business in terests and prosperity of the country. It has had the effect of causing men to hoard green-backs, and the banks to withhold circulation.
